

The Indigenous Community-Based Master of Education Program has been designed to provide a unique cohort model of graduate education to educators in off-campus locations in order to more effectively link theory to local educational issues and practice.

The University of Regina's Indigenous Community-Based Master of Education, in partnership with Gabriel Dumont Institute, allows you to:

- Obtain a graduate degree in your community,
- Participate in a cohort with your local educational needs in mind, and
- Gain access to high quality, relevant professional development.

For educators seeking an innovative and meaningful graduate degree program.

Program Review

The program incorporates the following elements:

- a full University of Regina, M.Ed. degree program focusing on leadership in the context of Aboriginal Education;
- a 30 credit hour program: 10 courses offered on-site over a 2 ½ year period;
- a cohort of students, forming a community of learners who are able to support each other in their learning;
- a flexible course delivery, including weekend sessions, summer institutes, and online distance education;
- the use of information technology to better support links between students and with instructors;
- content themes tailored to respond to community and student needs including: educational leadership and Aboriginal Education, and curriculum and instruction; and
- a program Coordinator to offer advice and support to students.

*Proposed tentative sequence is subject to change.
